

Dr. Danya Khoujah is a Board-certified Emergency Physician practicing in Baltimore, Maryland. She attended medical school at King Abdulaziz University in Jeddah, Saudi Arabia, and completed her Emergency Medicine residency at the University of Maryland Medical Center in Baltimore. She has since completed a Faculty Development Fellowship, the American College of Emergency Physicians (ACEP) Teaching Fellowship and is soon to graduate a Master of Education in Health Professions from Johns Hopkins University.

Since graduation, she has served as on several national committees, and has been awarded the status of Fellow by both the American Academy of Emergency Medicine (AAEM) and the American College of Emergency Physicians (ACEP). As an Assistant Professor at the University of Maryland School of Medicine, she is actively involved in medical student and resident education, medical simulation, and in faculty development.

In addition, Dr. Khoujah is a nationally known speaker and author, with specific interest in geriatric emergencies and emergency neurology.