

Dr. Steckler is an Instructor in Clinical Emergency Medicine at the George Washington University, and currently works in several emergency departments in Washington, DC. Dr. Steckler completed her residency in Emergency Medicine at the George Washington University.

Dr. Steckler has had a longstanding interest in health policy and advocacy, beginning with working at the National Institutes of Health's National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism. While in medical school, she interned at the American Academy of Pediatrics' Department of Federal Affairs and participated in the Government Relations Internship Program through the American Medical Association. During residency, Dr. Steckler completed the Residency Fellowship in Health Policy through the Milken School of Public Health at the George Washington University and served as a health policy fellow for the Chair of the Senate Finance Health Subcommittee on Capitol Hill.

Dr. Steckler has been a proud member of the chapter since 2017. In her various roles, Dr. Steckler has supported the chapter's many important initiatives over the years. She represented the chapter at the ACEP19 National Conference and worked with colleagues to write resolutions for ACEP20. Over the past year, she has participated in efforts to enhance the chapter's relationship with medical students interested in emergency medicine, including assisting in organizing a program director panel for prospective residents.

In addition to working clinically, these experiences have all contributed to her passion for being a part of DC ACEP. Dr. Steckler continues the tradition of monitoring both clinical and legislative environments and acting when needed to preserve the health of DC's patient and emergency physician communities.
